Not currently self contained so maintain bus services
Not necessarily employment
Shops, facilities, small businesses
Less dependent on cars
Marginally best option
If Cradley grows it will need shops and other facilities
Nice idea but where's the employment?
Nice but impossible
Desirable but difficult to achieve / maintain How?
Ideally but may not be possible
New shops unlikely in present economic climate
Would turn it into a town
Relative to size and within what is realistically achievable
Would not have moved here if wanted a different village
Unfortunately attaining this depends on the use of the in-village facilities by the community.
We have already lost the post office and shop through lack of support. Pete the meat has not noticed any increase in business, apart from an initial flourish.
Depends on the village growing sufficient to support shops etc.
Yes this would be an ideal environment but further development is required to increase the size of the population to justify shops, school and other community facilities.
too many pigeons
A strong community needs a focal point - facilities and services help create an identity.
I would be cautiously supportive of this with the proviso that the character or basic footprint of the village was not lost or over developed.
As long as it remains a village
Might need to be a community shop it is in danger of not being self contained because of loss of shop and threatened loss of bus service
